

"And the Greatest of These is CHARITY"

The United States today is on the threshold of a great and devastating world war. We are in it, but hardly yet of it--we have not yet tasted the bitter fruits that the nations of Europe have had to endure for 3 years.

But the call to arms has come, our president has asked for one million troops, to be taken from our homes and the homes of our friends, and we know not how many more may have to go.

Perhaps many of us remaining behind will escape the anxiety and anguish of having any of our dear ones at the front. Perhaps we may not even have friends whom we know there.

But whether we do or not, we are all part of one great American family. We are all gathered in council at the call of our President and each and every man, woman and child in the United States today has an unshrinkable duty to perform. We must get ready to help.

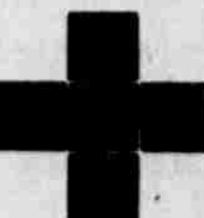

We may count the cost, but we dare not shrink while we remember the traditions of our nation and our forefathers.
